Overview

This is a fun little side project where I've described a fictional language of "Draconic". This is by no means official but is inspired by the world of "Dungeons and Dragons", and loosely based on the small lexicon created by Sean Reynolds, and the expanded lexicon and grammar developed by Erin Evans. I used these as sources of lore and inspiration, as well as some general information found at https://forgottenrealms.fandom.com/wiki/Main_Page. Anyone who wishes to use the language I describe below is free to do so, and is encouraged to contact me if there are any questions or feedback.

Draconic (largely referred to in draconic as "glav") is supposedly the language of the dragons, and very ancient. Various dialects exist, spoken by dragons or dragon adjacent races such as dragonborn or kobolds. For the purposes of this document, the most "common" version of draconic will be described, which is Tymantheran. Yipyak for example, which is mostly spoken by kobolds, is a less sophisticated dialect. Tymantheran draconic (which will just be referred to as "draconic" from now on) can be assumed to be a kind of "standard draconic" for the purposes of non-dragon speakers, since most dragonborn originate from the region of Tymanther.

A bit of general cultural context is useful in understanding the language. The dragonborn are attuned to subtleties and implications within their speech. The idea of "shadow speaking" exemplifies this, describing the ability for someone to convey a criticism or insult without stating it overtly. It is possible for negative meaning, or implied double meanings to be conveyed subtly only being picked up by those paying close attention. Non-native speakers may sometimes have difficulty with this, so it is possible that a dragonborn may become frustrated when their hints are not being understood. Alternatively, they may choose to over-emphasize their honesty, be it positively or negatively, in an attempt to not be misunderstood when communicating with non-native speakers. The dragonborn are typically honourable, but not too prideful. They are welcoming of outsiders but maintain a certain image of status within their clans. It is considered good manners to understand one's place in the hierarchy and adapt the style of conversation appropriately. The language tries to mirror these general ideas.

Pronunciation

The pronunciation guide below is somewhat approximate. The reference words are provided in the general context of North American, or Standard Canadian english. More detailed descriptions of advanced pronunciation are given below.

Vowels

Symbol	IPA Phoneme	Reference Word	Note
a	ɑ/a	lot	Can be more front or back depending on the person speaking, but it should not be so far forward that it starts to sound like “cat”.
e	ɛ	bed
i	i	meet
o	o	boat
u	u	boot
y	ɪ	tip

Consonants

Symbol	IPA Phoneme	Reference Word	Note
b	b	bed
c	k	can
d	d	do
f	f	for
g	g	gone
h	h	help
j	j	yawn

k	k	can
l	l	lie
m	m	mid
n	n	no
p	p	pan
q	k	can
r	x	Stereotypical German “ach”.	Always unvoiced. This is the “default” pronunciation of r.
	ʀ	Unvoiced spanish r.	Always unvoiced.
s	s	so
t	t	tin
v	v	very
w	ʍ	Imagine a person from Texas saying “why”.	Breathy and subtle, not really voiced.
x	ks	axe
y	j	yawn
z	s	so

General Rules

Although the language has some harsh sounds (a lot of the [s] and [x] sounds), they shouldn't be emphasized or lengthened unless called for by the context or the grammatical rules. For example, do not lengthen "s" sounds to sound more snake-like unless there's a contextual reason to be doing it. Draconic may appear harsh if the speaker is angry, it's much like German or Arabic in that it can be rough and aggressive if necessary, but soft and beautiful in casual and intimate conversation.

Draconic benefits a lot from being spoken smoothly and with confidence. Just because the dragonborn are part reptile doesn't mean they're all rough (metaphorically). The language is supposedly an ancient one, used by a people who consider themselves honourable and resilient. The pronunciation would have been refined and smoothed out over many years of it being spoken, resulting in some sounds being combined to reduce friction when speaking (at least in the case of the dragonborn speakers, dragons themselves are a different topic). However, although there may be some mixing and some silent letters, the sounds that are pronounced should be pronounced precisely (not like English, where anything goes). This means that "i" for example should always be like the english "ee" as in "meet", and not slide "lower" in terms of vowel placement. This also means that double vowels like "oa" are still pronounced as a glide between the two sounds (as in "boa", unlike "boat").

Emphasis

As a general rule, the emphasis of a word is placed on the first syllable. There are several exceptions to this. One is in the case of double letters, mentioned below.

Another is in the case where the speaker wants to stress importance. In this case, the first and last syllable in the word would be stressed. When written, the word would be bracketed by "*" like this. Someone speaking draconic might do this when referring to themselves, referring to someone important, stressing an order, or just stressing the importance of something in particular (in general, or with respect to value or priority).

Another case where emphasis might be added is when using a word that is the adjectival form of another word (such as with "cosaith" and "cosaithi"). The "i" at the end of the word might be slightly more stressed in order to differentiate it more clearly from the base word, but this is not always the case.

If a word starts with vowel-consonant-vowel (such as "ixen" or "etahal"), the emphasis is typically shifted to the consonant instead of the first vowel.

Double Letters

When double letters are present in a word, the sound is extended but otherwise unaltered. Some emphasis is also placed on the sound. The exception to this is if two different letters which produce a similar sound are next to each other. For example, “kc” will be treated as if it were a single “k”.

Voicelessness

Pronunciations of sounds never go from being unvoiced to being voiced. For example, “s” will never become [z], it will always be [s], and “th” will always remain unvoiced.

Specific Cases

“r” at end of word

If there is an “r” at the end of a word, it is pronounced as [ɹ] instead of the usual [x]. The exception is if the word ends in “rr”, “gr”, or “hr”, in which case it is pronounced as [x].

“rg”, “rh”, “gr”, “gh”, “hr”

Any of these combinations result in the normal [x] sound for “r”. The exception is if the word ends in “gh” in which case it is pronounced as if the word ended with “g”.

“ir” after vowel at end of word

If there is a “ir” at the end of a word following a vowel (such as “eir”), it is pronounced as if the “r” was not there (“ei” for “eir”, “ai” for “air”, etc.).

“rn” at end of word

If there is a “rn” at the end of a word, the “n” is not pronounced and the “r” maintains the [x] pronunciation, resulting in the word being pronounced as if it ended with “rr”.

“v” at end of word

If there is a “v” at the end of a word, it is devoiced, becoming an [f]. The exception to this is if the word ends with “sv”, in which case the “v” is silent.

“vh”

The combination of “vh” is pronounced as [f].

“e” at end of word

If there is an “e” at the end of the word, it tends to be pronounced less prominently or with less emphasis than other ending vowels.

“mr” at beginning of word

If a word begins with “mr” the “m” is silent.

“ch”

The combination of “ch” is pronounced [tʃ], as in “ship”.

“sh”

The combination of “sh” can be pronounced several different ways. The simplest would be [ʃ], like “ch”, but a more detailed description can be found below.

“th”

The combination of “th” is pronounced as [θ], as in “think”.

“y” before vowel

If there is a “y” before a vowel, then it is pronounced as a [j], acting as a consonant. Otherwise it acts as a vowel and is pronounced as [ɪ].

“ng”

There is no combination of ng at the end of a word. If there is a “g” following an “n”, then there must be a syllable starting with that same “g” followed by a vowel. The sounds are also pronounced separately, and never combined, unlike the English “ing”.

Advanced Pronunciation

“s”

A single “s” is largely the normal [s] sound we’re familiar with in English.

“ss”

A “ss” can be pronounced similarly to “s”, but with a more “high” and “thin” sound, slightly more “hissy”.

“sj”

An “sj” can be pronounced with less emphasis on the “s” resulting in a more unvoiced gliding [h] sound following a subtler [s]. This also applies to “sy” when the “y” is being treated as a consonant.

“sh”

A “sh” can be pronounced several ways. The simplest is to pronounce it as [ʃ], the same as “ch”. It could also be pronounced as a glide between [s] and [h], although this is less common. The most common way to pronounce “sh” is a single more breathy and “lower” “s”. It can be imagined as the opposite of “ss” if starting from “s”. Like if one were making an “s” but their tongue is low.

“z”

A “z” can be pronounced similarly to “s”. Most of the time however it has a hint of a “t” before it, resulting in a [ts] sound.

“w”

The “w” is pronounced as an unvoiced [ʍ]. It can be approximated with a glide between [f] and [h], or the similar [ɸ].

Cross-Word Consonant Conflicts

If a word ends with a consonant that conflicts with a consonant starting the next word (pronounced using a similar part of the mouth, like g and g, or g and k) then the one at the end of the first word is not pronounced. For example, “thrik ghor”, although individually spoken as /θɹɪk/ and /gɔɹ/, would be pronounced /θɹɪ gɔɹ/.

Grammar

Word Order

Sentences generally follow the SVO order, although the subject may be omitted in some cases. The most common cases would be in the context of an imperative command, or if sufficient context is provided to easily infer the subject. Another case where the subject can be dropped is when using a passive voice. More details about this case in the section on conjugation. The word order is not entirely strict, and can be slightly rearranged in some more formal or poetic contexts.

Modifier words like adjectives and adverbs can be placed before or after the word they're modifying. The order of the words is generally dictated by their relative importance in the context, with the most important coming first. If excessive emphasis is needed, a modifier word can be added before and after the word it's modifying.

Subordinate clauses work the same way they do in english, as a clause that is dependent on another clause for context and meaning. It can be indicated by a relative pronoun or a subordinating conjunction.

Conjugation

Tenses and Modifiers

To indicate verb tense, no modification is made to the verb itself; modifier words or affixes are placed around the verb. No modifier on the verb implies present tense. Multiple modifiers may be combined in some cases, and when combining them, the pronunciation of the modifiers remains as it would individually. When adding affixes to the base verb however, the pronunciation may shift to align with the general pronunciation rules.

ghor: Generic past tense.

Simple verb modifier.

ghen: Generic future tense.

Simple verb modifier.

se-: Conditional.

Prefix added onto the main verb modifier, or used as a standalone modifier if there are none other present. Used to add conditionality to the verb in question.

ei: Infinitive.

Simple verb modifier. Used to indicate when a verb should be understood in the infinitive sense. (“to walk” instead of “walk”)

-eij: Continuous infinitive.

Verb suffix. Transforms a verb into its gerund, implying a continuity of the action. (“walking” instead of “walk”) ir: Reflexive.

Simple verb modifier. Makes the verb apply to the subject.

The modifiers always follow this order:

(ei) (se)(ghor/ghen) (ir) verb

Passive Tense and Voice

In order to convey a “passive voice”, there are no explicit markers other than omitting the subject from the phrase; the word order does not change from the normal SVO expression. For example, “the sword was taken” would be written as “took the sword” (ghor clax caex).

If the action being done represent the object changing some sort of state which could be represented by an adjective, then it can be expressed as having “become” that state. Using the same example as above, we could write it as “the sword became taken” (caex ghor culgheni claxi).

Conjugation Examples

I see myself.

ya ir ocur.

They see themselves.

ko ir ocur.

I would have liked to have seen myself.

ya seghor tuor ei ghor ir ocur.

Affixes

Draconic has various prefixes and suffixes which alter the meaning of words. In general, the affixes do not repeat letter combinations if some of the letters are already present. For example, adding the suffix “-eij” to the word “fei” would give “feij”, not “feieij”.

Required Affixes

These rules detail the situations in which certain affixes are required in order to convey a particular meaning.

Possession

Possessive affixes are attached to words in order to signal possession. They are normally attached to nouns but can sometimes be attached to verbs, and they can refer to more literal or figurative concepts.

The possessive affixes usually do not alter the emphasis on the syllables of the base word, and are usually unstressed unless context calls for extra emphasis on the possessive nature of the word.

In the regular case, there are 4 types of prefixes with a singular and a plural version:

veth- / vethi- : 1st person.

Indicating something belonging to the speaker. “my”, “our”

er- / erthe- : 2nd and 3rd person.

Indicating something belonging to someone the speaker has a relationship with, the implication being friendly or positive. “my friend’s”, “my ally’s”

ar- / ari- : 3rd person.

The catch-all prefix for something belonging to someone else. Technically neutral, but could have a negative connotation in certain situations. “their”

wus- / wushi- : 2nd person.

Indicating something belonging to the person being directly addressed by the speaker. This is considered informal, and if speaking to someone important, the er-/erthe- case would be more correct to use. “your”

In most cases, the possessive affixes will be referring to nouns, whether that means objects or concepts. In some cases though, the affixes can be used on different types of words, notably verbs. The implication in this case is that it is the action that belongs to the person. It is a way of representing ownership or responsibility for actions.

Indirect possession is shown slightly differently. In the case of wanting to indicate the possessive nature of something relative to someone who is not the speaker, the possessive affix that usually would have been a prefix is added as a suffix onto the observer. This indicates the relation as the observer would see it.

Note that this technique of using the suffix to indicate possession is never used with plain personal pronouns unless it is used to emphasize indirectness. There is no separate word equivalent for “my”, “your”, etc.

Possession Examples

my song
vethmiirik

the animal's song
baeshraveth miirik

my animal's song
vethbaeshraveth miirik

He does not like your plan.
ko thrik vekrus koer just.

This would be a less standard way of writing the phrase, but it distances the speaker from the sentiment being expressed by emphasizing the indirectness of the sentiment.

He does not like your plan.
ko thrik vekrus erjust.

This would be the more standard way of writing this phrase, but it puts the emphasis on the ownership of the plan.

Pluralization

Typically, pluralization of a noun is represented by adding the “-an” suffix. However, there are several cases where the behavior is slightly different.

Default: Add “an” to the end of the word.

ex. caex → caexan

Word ends with “an”: No change.

ex. faran → faran

Word ends with “a”: Add “n” to the end of the word.

ex. verthica → verthichan

Word ends with a vowel followed by either a single “r” or a single “s”: Replace the last two letters with “an”.

ex. klajus → klajan

ex. thurkear → thurkean

There are some cases where this rule would cause ambiguity. In the event that replacing the last two letters with “an” results in a word which is already a plural form of a different word, the “an” is simply appended to the word.

This rule also does not apply in the case where the word is less than four letters long. For example, the plural of “ner” would be “neran”.

This rule also does not apply in the case where the last two letters are “ir”. In this case, “an” is simply appended to the word.

Word ends with a single vowel: Replace the last vowel with “an”.

ex. kuhri → kuhran

Ordinal Numbers

The suffix “-che” is used to indicate ordinal numbers. See the section on numbers for more details.

Verb Gerund

The suffix “-eij” is used to transform a verb into its gerund. See the section on conjugation for more details. Note that a word may end in “-eij” but not be a verb gerund, but a verb gerund is necessarily represented by using this suffix.

Note that while in english, verb gerunds (verbs ending in “-ing”) are commonly used as adjectives, this does not apply to draconic. For example, saying “I watch the falling snowflakes” would be constructed as “I watch the snowflakes that fall” since “falling” would not be used as an adjective. In some cases or with different tenses this could be cumbersome, so other constructions could be used. For example, “I watched the falling snowflakes” could be constructed as “I watched the snowflakes fall”.

Optional Affixes

These rules are common enough that they’re worth noting, but are not considered a required rule. For example, many times a noun may have an adjectival form which ends in -i, but that does not mean that a word which ends in -i is necessarily an adjective or adverb related to a noun.

Negation

Adding the prefix “thu-” or “thur-” tends to negate the meaning of a word. This can be thought of as the “dis-” or “un-” prefixes in english.

In the “modern” version of draconic, “thur” is the conjunction “nor”. Etymologically, we can assume that its original purpose was to negate words and that the “nor” conjunction meaning came later.

Undoing

The prefix “he-” or “hes-” act similarly to the “thu-” prefix in that they imply a negation. They are typically used more in the context of something being undone or disassembled, as they imply action.

ex. nezai (v. dress) → henezai (v. undress)

Imperative

In the case of giving someone an order which involves a verb, a specific imperative form can be used where the verb is written in its base form and the order verb is used as a prefix. Some examples:

Meaning: stop straddling

Standard form: pok esthajareij

Imperative form: pokesthajar

Meaning: start walking

Standard form: aal eirgetheij

Imperative form: aaleirgeth

Characteristic

The suffix “-i” has a lot of history in the language, but in “modern” draconic it is most commonly used to indicate some sort of characteristic. This is usually done by converting a noun or verb into its adjectival form.

ex. jesjar (v. confuse) → jesjari (adj. confusing)

An exception to this would be materials (such as iron or steel) where the adjectival forms are the same as the noun.

The suffix “-i” may also be used to specify a smaller or a cuter variant of something.

Objective (Definite)

The suffix “-iss” is used to describe some sort of definite noun related to a verb or adjective. This can be roughly thought of as taking “xyz” and turning it into “xyz-type-thing”. This will normally result in an object which is specific.

ex. mul (v. change, alter) → muliss (n. a change, an alteration)

Quality (Indefinite)

The suffix “-ast” is used to describe the quality of the base word, or turn a related verb or adjective into an indefinite noun. This can be roughly thought of as taking “xyz” and turning it into “xyz-ness”. This will normally result in an object which is more general, and can represent the idea or concept of something.

ex. mul (v. change, alter) → mulast (n. change, the act of making something become different)

Profession (Formerly Possession)

The suffix “-ir” was originally used to indicate possession, and some remnants of this usage can be seen in the language. In “modern” draconic it is most commonly used to indicate a profession, or someone who performs a particular type of task.

ex. cothel (n. farm) → cothelir (n. farmer)

Active

The prefix “da-” can be used to turn a word into its active/verb form. This can be roughly thought of as taking “xyz” and turning it into “make-xyz” or “do-xyz”.

ex. vithrakiss (n. intrusion) → davithrak (v. intrude)

State

The prefix “go-” can be used to indicate a particular state related to the base word, turning a verb or noun into an adjective. This differs from the characteristic suffix though because it represents the state of something being affected.

ex. jesjar (v. confuse) → gojesjar (adj. confused)

Place

The suffixes “-ia” or “-ahia” can be used to indicate a place name. This is similar to how many place names in english end with “-land” or “-town”.

Pronouns

Personal

Much like the possessive prefixes, there are four categories of personal pronouns, each containing a singular and plural version. The form of the personal pronoun is the same regardless of whether it is the object or subject of a phrase.

ya / yth : 1st person

seh / eth : 2nd and 3rd person

Can be used for both 2nd and 3rd person. Considered polite and carry a friendly or respectful connotation.

ko / koth : 3rd person

Considered neutral, but could be potentially rude depending on the context.

wux / wuxi : 2nd person

Considered casual. For formal cases, the seh/eth pronouns are considered more correct.

Reflexive

Reflexive pronouns are not used to express actions that are being done to oneself. For this, see more about the “ir” verb modifier in the conjugation section. They can be used for emphasis though, or as an adverb. There is no casual 2nd person reflexive pronoun, but the three categories do have a singular and plural form.

vethir / vethiir : 1st person

Effectively “myself” / “ourselves”.

erir / erthir : 2nd and 3rd person

Effectively “yourself” / “yourselves” or “themselves” / “themselves”.

arir / ariir : 3rd person

Effectively “themselves” / “themselves”.

Other

For relative/interrogative pronouns, see the section on asking questions.

Draconic has no possessive pronouns (“mine”, “my”, etc.), see the section on affixes for how to indicate possession.

Questions

Binary

A binary (yes/no) question can be asked in two different ways.

The first way is to start the phrase with the question indicator word, followed by the question itself formed as a statement. This is typically used when the question is more open-ended, or if the person asking does not want to make any implications about what the answer might be.

The second way is to simply state the question, followed by either a “yes” or “no” with an inquisitive tone. The word chosen would be the one that the asker either anticipates getting (in the case of asking for confirmation) or the one they hope to get (potentially trying to influence). In an informal context, the confirmation word may be omitted, making the question simply take the form of a statement and rely entirely on the tone to convey the fact that it is a question.

asu : Question indicator

thrik : no

axun : yes/yeah

akison : yes (forma)

thup : no/nope (informal)

sup : yeah/yup (informal)

Specific

More specific questions start with an interrogative word followed by the question statement. Unlike english, the ordering of the elements of a statement does not change when it becomes a question. For example, “What does this mean?” would be constructed as “what this means”.

their : which/what

vuir : who

vesk : where

ghenti : when

ith : how

ithkohu : how much/how many

suvor : why

Inquiring about possession works slightly differently. There is no equivalent word to “whose” given the method of indicating possession via prefixes. The speaker asks who “takes” the object in question. For example, “Whose cat is this?” would be constructed as “who takes this cat”.

Negation

There is no separate word for “not”, the word for “no” (thrik) is used. It is placed in front of the thing it is negating which could be a noun, verb, or phrase.

Articles

Draconic has no articles; no “the” or “a”. The definiteness of a given object can be inferred from other words in the context, or sometimes via the affixes used.

Having Stuff and Being Things

There is some subtlety to the description of possession in draconic, so there is not a 1-1 translation of how one would describe something “being” or “having” something.

Specific Verbs

cul : Is.

Used to describe the nature of something, what it literally is. Only works with nouns. For example, “I am human”, “that is a house”, “this is my answer”.

eith : Is / has.

Used to describe something having a particular quality which could be literal or figurative. This is the most generally applicable of these specific verbs and it works with both nouns and adjectives. For example, “I am/have sad/sadness”, “that house has three doors”, “your sword is old”.

ghoc : Has.

Used to describe something or someone having possession of something concrete. Only works with nouns. For example, “I have two cats”, “they have weapons”. Note that this is not the same as saying that those things belong to the subject, simply that they are currently in possession of them. For details concerning ownership and possession, see the section on required affixes.

Zero Copula (ish)

In many cases, the would-be copula (is, am, etc.) can simply be dropped if the connection between the other components of the phrase is clear enough. This is normally done in a casual context. In a case where there is too much ambiguity or confusion, whatever is being said would usually be rephrased. Some examples:

“Why are you here?”

Instead of “why you are here”, it can be written “why you here”. Or it could be rephrased as “why you (past tense) come here”.

“That spider is black.”

This could be written as “that spider black”. Using “eith” here would still be technically more correct, but unnecessary.

“The situation was not good.”

This could be written as “situation (past tense) not good”.

“The last stop will be xyz.”

This could be rephrased as “we will not go past xyz”, or “we will finish at xyz”.

This relates in some way to adjectives being able to be placed before or after the word they’re modifying. Effectively, saying “the spider is bad” and “the bad spider” can both be written correctly as “spider bad”.

Specifics

Quotation

Placing text inside a quotation symbol (:) indicates someone speaking or references written text. If written on the same line and connected to other words that are not in the quotation marks, use the pause symbol. If the phrase ends with a quotation mark, a full stop can be placed on the outside of the mark.

Quotation Examples

“ok, we can do that,” he said.

:tjax - yth besjak dal eta: - ko ghor uk

he said “ok, we can do that”.

ko ghor uk - :tjax - yth besjak dal eta:.

Numbers

Cardinal Numbers

The counting system in draconic is base-10. Basic numbers are combined to make larger numbers, effectively by combining smaller words to make larger words.

In the general case, the larger number is always added on the left side of a word, except in the case of ones and tens which are inverted. In the case of there only being one of a particular order of magnitude, the word “one” can be omitted. If there are none, then it is not necessary to include that word. For example, the construction of 123 would be thought of as “hundred three and two ten”.

... (# of thousands)(thousand)(# of hundreds)(hundred)(# of ones)(combiner)(# of tens)(ten)

The combiner word placed between ones and tens (if they are both present) is “vu”. The pronunciation in the case of combining numbers together this way remains the same as it would for pronouncing the numbers individually. For example, 30 (turries) would still pronounce the “r” as a tap r, as if it were still at the end of a word despite being in the middle.

du : 0

ir : 1

don : 2
tur : 3
qala : 4
ki : 5
gho : 6
sara : 7
feh : 8
jal : 9
fies : 10
ieer : 100
tok : 1000

Side note on the numbers 1 through 9: In iokharic script, these numbers all bear a resemblance to various letters. The names of those numbers tend to start with those letters.

Ordinal Numbers

Ordinal numbers are indicated by taking the complete number and adding the suffix “-che”. In the case of adding this suffix, the pronunciation of the underlying word can change, unlike with cardinal number composition.

Time

The most prevalent timekeeping method used by the Vayemniri is likely the calendar of Harptos, or something similar. Each year is split into 12 months (divided roughly into 4 seasons), and each month is split into 3 weeks (tendays) of ten days.

eorikc : year

rikcnahr : season

aros : month

tural : tenday (week)

keariss : full day (including day and night)

kear : day

thurkear : night

Seasons

Seasons were originally expressed as “time of (some adjective)”. Eventually that was shortened to “season (adjective)”, and in a casual context the adjective by itself can be used to describe the season.

rikcnahr ocuthi / ocuthi : spring (time of awake) rikcnahr cosaithi / cosaithi : summer (time of growing) rikcnahr claxi / claxi : fall (time of taken)

rikcnahr peskjaethi / peskjaethi : winter (time of asleep)

Months

The months are named roughly in accordance with the meaning behind their common counterparts.

udeaskan : hammer / deepwinter

skaethan : alturiak / claws of cold

ushassal : ches / claw of sunsets

tiaghal : tarsakh / claw of storms

lesteij : mirtul / the melting

rikcojan : kythorn / time of flowers
cosulai : flamerule / summertide
annaiss : eleasis / highsun
koeijan : eleint / the fading
fethelosh : marpenoth / leaffall
metheij : uktar / the rotting
boskeij : nightal / the drawing down

Weeks

The days of the week are evolved from the names of various deities.

selkear
tyrkear
jankear
kelekear
myskear
lathkear
iskear
sunkear
oghkear
akkear

Time of Day

A full day is effectively understood as being split into four quarters along with the four points of time separating those quarters.

svelhass : Sunrise.
irche : Morning (the first quarter). From sunrise to noon.
rauhass : Noon, midday.
donche : Afternoon (the second quarter). From noon to sundown.
ushass : Sunset, sundown.

Senses

There are 6 main categories of senses that are differentiated strongly in draconic: smell, hearing, sight, taste, physical touch and non-physical feel.

There is no equivalent verb for something “emitting” a sense. For example, “something smells good” would be constructed as “something gives smell good” or “something gives good smell”.

Smell

scunt : v. Smell.

scunti : adj. Strong-smelling.

scuntiss : n. A smell.

bescunt : n. Sense of smell.

Hearing

qerasjyth : v. Hear.

kahi : adj. Loud.

kah : n. A sound.

besjyth : n. Sense of hearing.

Sight

ocuir : v. See.

ojahi : adj. Visually intense or busy.

ojah : n. A sight.

ocuiss : n. Sense of sight.

Taste

clask : v. Taste.

iaski : adj. Strong-tasting.

kisk : n. A taste.

beclask : n. Sense of taste.

Touch (physical)

rosf : v. Touch, feel.

rosfi : adj. Very tactile, having a distinct feel.

andiss : n. A touch, a feel.

eros : n. Sense of touch.

Feel (non-physical) jethrosf : v. Feel, sense.

jetua : adj. Having a powerful or strong feeling or vibe.

yathossk : n. A feeling, a vibe.

yeth : n. Sense of sense, sense of vibe.

Names

Dragonborn names (specifically Thymari) are not so much connected to the immediate family of the person, but often more to the clan itself. As a result, when introducing someone the clan name is said first, followed by the given name. One may have multiple given names, some more private than others; the clan or the parents may decide to add more names to the hatchlings, a more common practice in more populated areas.

If a person does not have a clan, then “thrikominaki” (clanless) replaces their clan name. This could be insulting, but omitting a clan name entirely could potentially be more insulting depending on the context.

Translating Names

Sometimes a name will need to be translated into draconic but some of the sounds required to pronounce it are not included in the draconic phonology. In this case, a combination of draconic sounds may be used to substitute those that are not pronounceable. For example, Jake could be approximated with “djeik”.

Greetings

Greetings

keshkai ocuiriss : Standard greeting, “hello”.

keshkai : Standard greeting, “hello”.

Less formal than the full form but still widely used, especially in more casual contexts.

enir : Standard casual greeting, “hey”.

sjath vethkeshka : Standard reply to a greeting.

The original meaning of one’s shadow persisting is somewhat lost, and this reply can be used as a generic acknowledgement of a greeting.

ciesrath : Standard way to say “welcome”.

wushzarath : Informal greeting, “what’s up”, “sup”.

Can be either just a greeting, or an invitation to provide information.

ith eith : Standard inquiry of wellbeing, “how are you”, “how is it”.

ith orgethj : Standard inquiry of how things are, “how’s it going”.

Farewells

ghen ocuiriss : Standard farewell, “see you later”, “be seeing you”.

karikc : Standard shortened farewell, “bye”, “later”.

Less formal but still widely used, especially in more casual contexts.

ihk erbensvelk : Polite farewell wishing someone good health.

erbensvelk : Polite farewell wishing someone good health.

Slightly less formal than the version with “ihk”.

ihk eromin bensvelk : Polite farewell wishing someone’s clan good health.

Specific Times

These relate to particular times of the day, and can be used as both greetings and farewells.

benirche : Wishing someone a good morning (first quarter).

bendonche : Wishing someone a good afternoon (second quarter).

benturche : Wishing someone a good evening (third quarter).

benqalache : Wishing someone a good late night or early morning (fourth quarter).

benkear : Wishing someone a good day.

benthurkear : Wishing someone a good night.

This has nothing to do with sleeping, just a reference to the time of day.

General

vur seh : Standard polite response whenever anyone wishes a good day, good health, etc.

irth : Used when introducing someone or something, “presenting”, “this is”.

Usually used at the beginning of a phrase followed by the thing that is being introduced. To use this to introduce oneself can be seen as either excessively confident, vain, arrogant, or a little annoying.

Swears

Draconic swear words are relatively versatile and can be mixed and combined depending on the situation. Their forms can also be altered according to the normal grammar rules in order for them to fit more naturally into a phrase. Most of these words can be used as exclamations individually, or used to add intensity to other words.

karsho : General purpose medium-high intensity swear word.

Usable similarly to how “fuck” is used in english, but with no sexual connotation.

arnahk : General purpose medium intensity swear word.

aithyas : Shit, crap. Low intensity swear word.

scrumtemas : Low intensity swear word expressing wanting someone to leave, “get the fuck out”.

Can be used seriously or jokingly.

Epithets

Insults

arthak dus : Absolute buffoon, complete idiot.

faess : Coward.

henish : Unhatched, rotten egg.

Calling someone this is a little like calling them a bastard.

nurhi : Ugly person, uggo.

Disrespectful but not the most heinous thing to call someone. Has a childish connotation.

maunthreki : Non dragonborn, especially relating to humans.

This is borderline a slur, maybe a little racist, but the degree of insult depends more on the context.

pothachi : Stupid person, dummy.

Somewhat silly connotation.

sthyarli : Idiot.

Medium intensity, less silly than “pothachi”.

strixiki : Very insulting term for dragonborn.

The insult comes from the comparison to dragons.

darathric : Impolite term for dragonborn, “non-dragon”.

Not super insulting but uncomfortable and maybe a little racist. Can imply weakness.

tiamash : Someone who is cruel, untrustworthy or careless.

Harsh insult.

thrikominaki : Clanless.

How much this is insulting depends on the context and how much a persona cares about being clanless, or called clanless. Technically the word is just a description of someone who does not have a clan, but used as an insult it can imply that someone does not belong or that they are unworthy.

Endearments

fintir : Slayer.

Can be used to compliment someone on their ability and strength, especially in combat.

irthiski : Romantic endearment, “little secret star”.

Has the connotation of specialness.

lovac : Faithful friend.

An archaic expression that would not be used casually.

noachi : Cute endearment, “little treasure”.

nytha : What newborn dragonborn call their mother, “mama”.

vorellim : Endearment, “beautiful”, “good-looking”.

Usually romantic but could simply be flirty or supportive.

vethparijan : Romantic endearment, “my little shield”.

Implies strength and protection.

sathi : Very familiar and informal way to refer to someone, “dude”, “bro”.

Non gendered, and would be disrespectful to use it to refer to someone in a different position in the hierarchy.

thuril : Friend.

koko : Pet name, somewhat personal or intimate, “babe”, “baby.”

Script

Iokharic script is used to write draconic (among some other languages). The history of the symbols is unclear, but it is thought one way or another to have originated with dragons, albeit after the language was already developed. It is an alphabet containing digits 0-9 as well as the 26 english alphabet symbols. There is no capitalization, and the punctuation includes a full stop, pause, emphasis and quotation markers.

Many of the symbols have a common “centerline” around which other markings are made. This line serves as a kind of anchor when writing, and punctuation is vertically aligned with this point.

The design of the symbols is clearly derived from claw marks, but we can imagine that “modern” draconic writing would be done with brush strokes, mimicking the original scratch marks.

Here you can see the digits 0-9, followed by the letters a-z, then the full stop, pause, quotation, and emphasis symbols.

Translation Examples

Short

ya voreij vur dalakeij aklave.	I am learning and making draconic.
qilal ei eithir obor lexan ssjek tuor besjak ei renthisjeij thumith claxeij throden virakan.	I need to know more words if I want to be speaking without having many problems. ¹
seh se tuorsv - asu eta pothoc ei daghal taesh vis thuraithiss - ei dalak vur vor renthisjiss their thrikoth eithir vur their shuk thrikoth ghen renthisj. gochmavor cul axun - seith pasi. asu ghen dal pru. routhi axun - eith vethprujedj. thrik eithir suvor - shar ya sihreith eta davekrusi vur olakethai.	You might ask, is it stupid to work on this task, to create and learn a language that nobody knows and that almost nobody will speak? The answer is yes, maybe a little. Will I do it anyway? Obviously yes, it is my nature. I don't know why, but I find it enjoyable and interesting. ²
ya ghoc oio saraieer lexan visrikc, zyak ghen aal ei lehran jeski lehran zyak their besjak nehft ettan their ghor thuuk.	I have about 700 words now, so I'll start to write complete sentences so that I can find those which I have missed.
vis hanurith ghen ysjil ya culgheni oben taesh laitheij lexan.	This will also help me become better at remembering words. ³
of besjak ocuir - ya faok keshkai.	As can be seen, I still make mistakes.
loski ya ghen faok nar ghenti ya vor vur throtokaith obor.	Hopefully I will make fewer mistakes once I learn and practice more.
kessheij vis yarth getheij ekess daghaliss.	I'm writing this while going to work.
kear eith kruiss - pasi skaethi shar hassi.	It's a nice day, a little cold but sunny.
visrikceij - besjak uk throden munthan mrith glav - shar ssjek tuor besjak ei ukrisi munthan obor kosjalai vur poleth daothan obor feyaluri - qilal ei eithir firran tok lexan.	Currently, I'm able to say many things in draconic, but if I want to be able to say more specific things and express more complex ideas, I need to know several thousand words. ⁴
ya qilal fiko mrith vuir ya besjak throtokaith renthisjeij zyak their ya besjak vor obor kales.	I need someone with whom I can practice speaking so that I can learn faster.

¹ The omission of the subject several times in this phrase because the context of the phrase is generalizable.

² "vethprujedj" (prujedj) is an example of a word which is not easily directly translatable.

³ Note how the verb modifier must always be in front of the verb.

⁴ Note the differences in meaning between "uk" and "ukrisi".

ya se vekrus ei sferat vis viraka kales.	I would like to solve this problem quickly.
ya ghor losk their eta se eith obor zaithi.	I had hoped that it would be easier.
ya ghor losk their eta seghor eith obor zaithi.	I had hoped that it would have been easier.
viraka ghor ir sferat.	The problem solved itself.
viraka seghor ir sferat ssjek ko thrak seghor gethrak.	The problem would have solved itself if he had not come.
ya seghen tuor ei ir nezai.	I would want to dress myself. ⁵
ihk ya ei daljoval - ya nithral laith ith ei daljoval.	In order for me to play, I must remember how to play.
ya nithral laith ith ei daljoval ihk ya ei daljoval.	I must remember how to play in order for me to play.
ya nithral laith ith ei daljoval zyak their ya besjak daljoval.	I must remember how to play so that I can play.
ihk ei daljoval - nithral laith ith.	In order to play, I must remember how. ⁶
ya laith ith ei daljoval - zyak ya besjak daljoval.	I remember how to play, so I can play.
ya besjak daljoval anner ya laith ith.	I can play because I remember how.
ener ya laith ith ei daljoval - ya besjak daljoval.	Since I remember how to play, I can play.
daghaleij taesh voreij.	I am working on learning.
daghaleij ihk ei vor.	I am working in order to learn.
daghaleij zyak their vor.	I am working so that I learn.
daghal - zyak vor.	One works, so one learns.
wux wosh vis.	This is for you.
ya se qilaleij throden lexan.	I was going to need a lot of words. ⁷
ya se qilal othi achthend.	I would need a lot of food.
ko uk - :their eta:.	He said, "what is that?"

⁵ The conjugation indicates that the speaker is referring to something that would happen in the future.

⁶ The personal pronoun is omitted so this could also be a general statement about anyone.

⁷ The English subtlety of the past continuous is expressed here a little differently. "was going to need" effectively translates as "would needing". The word "throden" (many) is used because words are countable.

ko ghor ir tuorsv - :usv vuir:.	She asked herself, “but who?”
firr kear ya ghor eirgetheij vur ghor oc vis turasj yoost. juth - ya ghor wystozath yoost vur onureth ghor majoskj osh kosji fesk. vur ya ghor aias - :eta yoost ghor fehrak vrak:	One day I was walking and I saw this big log. Then, I rolled the log over and underneath was a tiny little stick. And I was like, “That log had a child!”.
vesk far.	Where is the bread?
ghor shaf hefth ghoros.	It was on the table before.
asu vur visrikc.	And now?
thrik eithir sathi - wux uth ihk eta.	I don’t know dude, you look for it. ⁸
hass xareath.	The sun shines.
hass xareatheij.	The sun is shining.
hass ghor xareath.	The sun shone.
hass ghen xareath.	The sun will shine.
hass dayesh ei xareath.	The sun has been shining. ⁹
hass xareatheij throtoki visrikc.	The sun is shining again. ¹⁰
hass ghen xareath earnek.	The sun will shine tomorrow.
hass xareath skieli.	The sun shines brightly.
skieli hass xareath.	The bright sun shines.
hass sveletheij visrikc.	The sun is rising now.
toodus dokaalan ghor funa.	All the people shouted.
firr dokaalan ghor funa.	Some of the people shouted.
firr nahr vissan dokaalan ghor funa.	Some of these people shouted.
throden dokaalan ghor funa don etaghalan.	Many of the people shouted twice.
athoi dokaalan throtoki funa.	Happy people often shout.

⁸ The combination of the informal pronoun and the order would make this very rude unless the two people involved were very close, either related or good friends.

⁹ No direct translation for present perfect continuous.

¹⁰ “visrikc” (now) is needed so that “throtoki” is understood as “again” instead of “often”.

nesqaali dax ghor thup svela.	The kitten jumped up.
nesqaali dax ghor thup shafaer hefth.	The kitten jumped onto the table.
vethdax nesqaali kosj ghor eirgeth vithal.	My little kitten walked away.
eith oposs.	It's raining.

¹³ Normally, as seen in many of these examples, the sex or gender of a person is not specified unless it is relevant. Since this is heavily dependent on context, some of the examples specify it but most of them do not. Similarly, the examples sometimes include or omit other words (such as the subject or the copula) which are not necessarily required. In many cases, multiple constructions of the phrase would be considered correct, so the translations seen here are not the only possible ones.

1. Scruff at the Festival

At the strength game, a very strong and tall woman was flexing proudly. Scruff approached and with no hesitation grunted,

The woman looked down at the dwarf and scoffed, “You couldn’t handle me.”

Scruff took the hammer and for a long time adjusted his hands on the handle, searching for the right grip. Finally, he raised the hammer then brought it down with unbelievable speed and amazing strength. The iron ball shot up, smashing the bell and flying away, landing with a soft thud. Scruff returned the hammer, looked up at the strong woman and said,

“Handled.”

Impressed, the woman shouted “Come find me later!” as the dwarf waddled towards the eating game.

2. The Farmer

The sun was lowering behind the dark hills when Imun returned home. After a long day of working the land they wanted only two things, food and sleep. With tired arms they pushed open the door of their old farmhouse and immediately went to grab some bread that was sitting on the table across the room. Just as they were about to take the loaf, they felt a chill.

“So,” a rough voice came from the shadows. Imun turned to face the intruder.

“Good evening, Vathyl,” Imun muttered sarcastically. Vathyl took a step sideways, blocking the door, and asked,

“Is it?”

“What?” Imun sighed.

“Good.” Vathyl stepped closer and Imun caught a glimpse of steel under their black leather coat. “Because Garr doesn’t have his food. Do you think this is good?”

“It’s not ready yet.” Imun watched as Vathyl lazily searched the small room with their dark eyes. “The rains were not—”

“Garr doesn’t care about the waters,” Vathyl said as if it were an undeniable truth of the world. It may have been true, but Imun had heard too many times that Garr doesn’t care about the waters. Their tail swished as Vathyl continued. “You gave us a day and an amount. Now, either you give us what is owed—”

“Or what? Get real Vathyl, stop with your shit. We both know how this needs to work.” Imun remembered the knife in their belt and put their hands behind their back as casually as possible, trying to subtly search for it. Vathyl seemed uninterested. “Besides,” Imun continued, “I’m surprised Garr still gives you simple jobs like this. I thought you would have become more important by now.” Imun had no time to react before Vathyl’s sword was at their throat. Imun slowly lowered their hands as Vathyl moved closer, staring into Imun’s eyes and keeping the sword held in place.

“Ten days,” Vathyl breathed. After a short pause, the intruder quickly spun and left. Imun stood motionless for some time considering what to do. They decided that something would need to be done, but not immediately. First they would eat, then they would sleep. After all, it had been a long day.

3. The North Wind and the Sun

The North Wind and the Sun disputed as to which was the most powerful, and agreed that he should be declared the victor who could first strip a wayfaring man of his clothes. The North Wind first tried his power and blew with all his might, but the keener his blasts, the closer the Traveler wrapped his cloak around him, until at last, resigning all hope of victory, the Wind called upon the Sun to see what he could do. The Sun suddenly shone out with all his warmth. The Traveler no sooner felt his genial rays than he took off one garment after another, and at last, fairly overcome with heat, undressed and bathed in a stream that lay in his path.

Persuasion is better than force.
